FUND COMMENTARY

The Pie KiwiSaver Growth Fund returned 0.4% this month, bringing it to a 12-month return of 5.4%.

April was marked by sharp swings across global financial markets, driven largely by renewed geopolitical uncertainty and abrupt shifts in investor sentiment. Early in the month, markets reacted strongly to fresh trade tariff announcements, triggering widespread volatility. However, a late-month pause in the implementation of these measures helped restore confidence, resulting in a meaningful rebound across asset classes.

Despite the headline noise, the underlying fundamentals of many of the companies we invest in remain strong. Market volatility, while often uncomfortable, can create opportunities for long-term investors. Throughout the month, we remained focused on identifying high-quality businesses with resilient earnings profiles and strong balance sheets, while also managing portfolio risk through active cash and sector positioning.

Fixed income markets had a solid month but were not immune to the market volatility. Whilst government bond markets generally registered gains (due to market rates/yields), longer-dated treasury bonds had a more interesting month. Amidst the worst of the carnage in equity markets, a sell-off in long-dated treasuries became disorderly with a rapid move higher in yields (pushing bond prices lower). The bond moves clearly caught President Trump's attention as he cited them as a primary reason for pausing the reciprocal tariffs. This took the pressure off long-end bonds and kick-started the rally in broader markets.

Property and infrastructure assets also experienced swings during the month, particularly those with exposure to global trade flows, and as such we trimmed positions with direct exposure to trade.

While the short-term outlook remains clouded by uncertainty, it also reinforces the importance of staying disciplined and focused on the long term. We continue to look through short-term noise and seek opportunities where market dislocations have created value. With a prudent approach and a long-term mindset, we believe we are well placed to navigate this period of heightened uncertainty and deliver consistent outcomes for investors over time.
