FUND COMMENTARY

The Pie KiwiSaver Balanced Fund returned 3.3% during the month, bringing it to a 12-month return of 14.1%.

February was another strong month for the Fund. The gains were driven by solid earnings reports from the majority of companies, as well as increased optimism around spending on AI. The earnings report for Nvidia was the most closely watched event of the month, and the company did not disappoint, posting 265% sales growth, which was well ahead of estimates, leading to the share price rising 16% on the day and 29% over the month. We have owned Nvidia in the fund since the end of 2022, and while we have taken some profits due to the strong gains, it remains an important holding.

Fixed Income had a tough month, with government bonds moving materially lower (rates higher). Resilient economic growth data and signs of stickiness in the last mile of inflation saw bond markets heed the warnings of central banks that interest rate cuts may not arrive as soon as previously anticipated. However, in New Zealand, there was some relief in bond markets at month's end when the Reserve Bank indicated they were not considering more rate hikes, as some feared, acknowledging broad progress on inflation and weakness in the economy.

The fund's performance in February was also boosted by strong gains for Meta, Duolingo, Schneider Electric, Spotify, and Alcon, which all posted strong earnings results. The main detractor was Newmont Mining, which underperformed our expectations of results. Overall, we remain positive on the outlook for global markets.
